Introduction

This automated report provides a description of your Moral Values. These are based on the answers you gave in the questionnaire. Your responses were compared with those of a group of others. In this study, Moral Values focused on four sub-values, namely:

- Honesty
- Moral stability
- Modesty
- Materialism

Together, they demonstrate to what extent you are led by your Moral Values, which in turn indicates the level of your integrity risk in ambiguous situations.

Your results

Moral values

In general, when it comes to decisions and behaviour, you are primarily led by Moral Values. As a result, you will probably choose to act with integrity, even when rules are less clear or not strictly adhered to. Integrity risks are small.

Please see below for details per sub-value

The questionnaire shows that you are not inclined to manipulate others or to lie. You think it is very important to speak the truth. Even though a lie might increase your chances of success, you remain honest. You attach great importance to keeping your promises.

According to the questionnaire, you are not easily prepared to cheat or break the rules. However, if doing so involved great personal gain, for instance for your career or to achieve personal goals, you might break a rule.

You see yourself as a normal person, who does not need to be seen as important all the time. In your eyes, everyone deserves the same level of appreciation and nobody deserves better treatment than others. You do not find it very important to be in the limelight.

You are reasonably interested in having status and a luxurious lifestyle. You may at times be jealous of others, for instance if they have more than you. But it is not important to your wellbeing to be rich or to hold a high position.
